A MANUAL OF ASTRONOMY.

BHORT HISTORY OF ASTRONOMY. By Arthur Berry, M. A., Assistant Tutor in Kings College, Cambridge, Duodecimo, pp. 440. Charles Scribner's Sons.

By design or through the force of circumstances not originally foreseen, this book is a curious counterpart of Miss Clerke's delightful "History of Astronomy," which is devoted principally to the work of the nineteenth century, and summarizes in a chapter all that went before. Mr. Berry, in a way that is all out of proportion to the rest of his book, and that seems sadly unappreciative of the achievements of the last hundred years, dismisses the century now drawing to a close with a very hasty and unsatisfactory survey, and devotes himself principally to earlier periods. It is another notable esture of his work that while he names Harkness, Newcomb, Langley, Bond, Pickering, Young, Hale, Burnham, Barnard, Asaph Hall and See, he does so in what appears like a studiously inadequate way, and altogether ignores Peters, Rutherfurd, the Drapers, Todd, Keeler and other Americans who have contributed largely to our stock of astronomical knowledge. This would not appear so remark able-in view of the pressure under which he obviously labored-if it were not for the rather more ample recognition accorded to Huggins, Lockyer and their English contemporaries. What will seem to many readers another blemish to Mr. Berry's work is his departure from scoepted modes of spelling several names. He insists that Copernicus should have two "p's" in it; he says "Galilei" and not "Galileo"; "Lionardo," not "Leonardo da Vinci," and so on. Much greater justification should be afforded than he is able to plead for confusing modern geaders in this fashion.

Although the ancients had no such instru ments for observation as have been available since the time of Galileo, they were watchful students of celestial phenomena and ingenious theorists. If they erroneously assumed that the earth was stationary, and that all of the heavenly bodles revolved around it, at least they kept careful records of eclipses and the seasons at which the various fixed stars rose, and noted other facts of which the modern astronomer is glad to have information. The Greeks were clever mathematicians, too, and formulated a number of laws relating to the movements of the sun, moon and planets. Hipparchus hit upon the precession of the equinoxes; and even poor Ptolemy, who was responsible for a system of ideas which has now been proven sadly Malse, at least conceived that the earth was a sphere. Substantial headway was made when, in the sixteenth century, Copernicus and his disciples, Tycho Brahe, Gallleo and Kepler, estabdished the theory that the earth revolved on its exis, and that it and the other planets moved in approximately circular orbits about the sun. Copernicus seems to have believed that the fixed but Kepler, who had first reached a fairly ac curate estimate of the distance of the earth from the sun, concluded that the stars were very much more distant. He also gave us important laws in regard to the movements of planets in elliptical orbits.

Newton, with his applications of the laws of gravitation to astronomy, opened up a new era in that science. Laplace, who is perhaps better known to the laity as the author of the "nebular hypothesis," also rendered good service by his mathematical development of "celestial mechanice." Flamsteed, who belongs to the last half of the seventeenth century; Halley, who lapped over into the eighteenth, and Bradley and the Herschels, who belonged exclusively to the latter period, constituted a great school of observing astronomers. Flamsteed not only obeserved, but he "reduced" his data; Halley was the first to predict successfully the return of a comet; Bradley worked out the problem of the aberration of light from the stars as it passed through the earth's atmosphere, and detected The nutation of the earth; and then came the Herschels with their huge telescopes and comprehensive study of the stars and nebulæ.

moon, the solar surface, stars, star spec tra and a comet or two; portraits of old-time astronomers, including a striking picture of Galileo; drawings of a few instruments and ob rvatories, and numerous diagrams.

MEETING OF THE ARMORY BOARD.

At a meeting of the Armory Board in the Mayor's office yesterday afternoon a dispute arose over the renting of quarters for the 2d Naval Battalion of Brooklyn. A committee reported in favor of pur chasing the property of the Atlantic Yacht Club-That was too much money to spend on 395 men while the 89th Regiment, one thousand strong, was supprovided for. General Butt thought that the battallon was asking for too much land, as he sunderstood they were going to drill on water. representative of the battalion replied that they would drill on both land and water.

The Wih Regiment should be provided for," said General Butt.

"The 69th will be provided for." said General McLeer. "There is no use harping on that string." The Mayor insisted that the matter should be ore thoroughly considered, and it was laid over. Commissioner Kearny reported that the owner of commissioner Kearny reported that the owner of the property leased for the use of the lat Battery was entitled to $570 more rent because of the increase of assessments. The Mayor said he thought it was too much, and the matter was laid over. Colonel Francis of the list Regiment reported that lights which had been put in the armory without consulting him were unsatisfactory. Conmissioner Kearny said that it had been reported to him that the lights were satisfactory. The matter was referred to Commissioner Kearny for examination.

The report of the committee in favor of the Fifty-gixth-st, slie for the Naval Reserve Armory was taken up again and voted down, and the committee was instructed to look for another site. A COLLECTOR'S SALE OF ANTIQUITIES.

Numerous articles from the collection of antiquities of J. H. Van Zandt are now on view at the Knickerbocker Auction Rooms, No. 8 West Twenty-eighth-st., and will be sold to-morrow and following afternoon at 2 o'clock. These comprise mahogany furniture, Colonial china, mirrors, prints, hall clocks, silver plate, copper, brassware and bric-Asprac. At the same time will be sold, by order of John E. Brodsky, attorney for the executor, some smedern household furnishings, including inlaid hall sclock, grand plane, carved Flemish cak, mahogany and Empire bedroom sets, Oriental rugs and carpets, teakwood stands, paintings, etc.

PROPOSED UNION OF CHURCHES.

Information comes from one familiar with the facts that there is a mortgage of $36,000 on the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church, and of $15 .controls. It is reckoned that the Thirteenth Street Presbyterian Church, which it is proposed to consolidate with the Fourth Avenue, has property valued at 250,000. If sold, this would more than wipe out the indebtedness of Dr. Crosby's old

POLICE SEVERELY CRITICISED.

MAGISTRATE BRANN HAS SOME SHARP THINGS TO SAY IN THE HAR-LEM COURT.

"The police, or some of them, have skins as thick as that of a rhinoceros. They do not seem to understand English when it is spoken. I am disgusted with the average policeman, and it is about time that some of them should have a little under

This is what Magistrate Brann said in the Harlem Police Court yesterday afternoon to Sergeant Lovell, of the court squad. Magistrate Brann was mad clear through. He had been criticising the force severely, and had risen in his seat and was pounding on the desk vehemently. Sergeant for Cuban and Porto Rican waters. She carries Lovell had previously told the Magistrate when he had become a little angry himself that if Magistrate Brann had any complaints to make or criti-cisms to offer there was a proper place to make them. This increased the anger of the Magistrate.

On Tuesday Mrs. Mary Lehu, the mother of Frederick Lehu, twenty-five years old, of No. 204 East Ninety-eighth-st., secured a warrant from Magistrate Brann for her son on the charge of insanity. There seemed to be an understanding between the Magistrate and Mrs. Lehu that her son, after being committed to Bellevue, should be taken there in a coach accompanied by a policeman. Yesterday Frederick Lehu was arraigned before Magistrate Brann. He had been on Ward's Island before, and had been taken from there by his

This made Mrs. Lehu indignant. Magistrate Brann, in committing the prisoner, turned him over to Policeman McGillen, who happened to be standing on the bridge. McGillen knew nothing about removing Lehu in a carriage, and took him fown to the jail and placed him in the care of Keeper Bremel. He was put in a cell and kept there, and an ambulance was about to be sent for from Bellevue, when Mrs. Lehu appeared and raised a storm because her son was not permitted to be taken to a cab and sent to the insane pavil-Mrs. Lehu and her son came from their home to the courthouse in a cab, and this vehicle stood waiting on the outside. When the policeman was told about the cab by Mrs. Lehu he referred the matter to Sergeant Lovell, and the sergeant in-structed the policeman to accompany Mrs. Lehu and her son to Bellevue. When the trio reached the carriage the driver demanded $1 50 for services thus far rendered, which Mrs. Lehu paid, and then he demanded $250 more to take all three to the

Mrs. Lehu refused to pay $250, and Police McGillen said he would not pay it, either, and the upshot of the matter was that the young man was taken back to the jall again. Mrs. Lehu rushed upstairs just as Magistrate Brann was ascending the bench, and complained about the treatment her son had received, and recalled to the Magistrate's attention the agreement she had with him for the remove of her son to the hospital in a carriage. Mrs. Lehu blamed Sergeant Lovell. Magistrate Brann summoned the sergeant before him. Lovell, who did not know about the dispute over the cab hire, apologized for Policeman McGillen's conduct. Then he went away and found out the true state of things, and he rushed back to explain to Magistrate Brann.

"I know all about it now. Your Honor," said the sergeant. "It was the fault of Policeman McGillen, parily, but mostly the fault of this lady." Don't want to hear anything about it? shouted Maristrate Brann. "You policemen can always place the fault on somebody else."
"Let me tell you about it. Your Honor," said the sergeant. upshot of the matter was that the young man was sergeant.

"Why don't you put policemen with some brains on the bridge here" shouted Magistrate Brann.
"I always try to do my duty, sir, and policemen have some feelings if they have no brains."
"No they haven't, either," said the Magistrate.
'I never saw an average policeman who could think straight yet. I am tired of this kind of men."
Then Sergeant Loveil turned, saying aloud that if the Magistrate had any complaints to make there was a proper place and time to make them. This caused the Magistrate to jump to his feet and give expression to the remarks above quoted.

closely cross-questioned him in the presence of State Detective Jackson. His answers were hot clear, and aroused enough doubt in the minds of the officers to lead them to place no great faith in the man's story. Captain McClusky said he had not much faith in the tale, but that it was important enough to have an investigation made, and this is being done.

James Hillings surrendered himself to Captain White, of the Bergen-st, police station, in Brooklya, vesterday afternoon. He said that he heard that he was wanted, and decided to give himself up. Billings is thirty-four years old, a cook, and lives at No. 403 Carlion-ave. Brooklyn, Captain White informed Captain McClusky soon after Billings surrendered, and Billings was brought to this borough. He was taken before Captain McClusky, and had a long conference with him. Billings declares that every statement made by Johnson is false, and he denies that he ever saw Susie Martin.

"WHAT CAN BE DONE FOR THE DRAMA

At Columbia University yesterday William her, the English dramatic critic, delivered a Magistrate Brann was convinced that the lecture before a considerable number of students young man was insane, but seemed to forget all and others on the subject of "What Can Be Done about the agreement he had with Mrs. Lehu as to for the Drama." He thought that there ought to be the taking of the young man to Bellevue in a carriage, for he committed him to the insane pavillon of art, but little commercial value, could be brought the regular way, first committing him to the before the few who cared to see them. For instance, nearly all the plays of Shakespeare ought to be nearly all the plays of Shakespeare ought to be acted from time to time, half of them because they were "the sunlit heights of the drama," and the other half because they were Shakespeare's, and every side of Shakespeare ought to be studied.

Mr. Archer said that he was opposed to any national or municipal endowment for a theatre in America or England, but he advocated an endowment by private subscription, somewhat like those by means of which the opera is carried on in New-York and London. He described the workings of similar plans on the Continent of Europe, and said that he looked forward to something of the sort in America and England, and believed that it was more likely to start in America. He sounded a note of warning that it would be fatal for such an enterprise to get into the hands of persons with "the narrow enthusiasm of a clique." It must not be committed to those who swore entirely by the Elizabethan drama or by Ibsen or by Hauptmann or by any one person or school.

HOBOKEN BANKS DIVORCED.

A TRANSFER OF STOCK AND CHANGE IN OFFICERS WHEREBY THEY BECOME INDEPENDENT OF EACH OTHER.

Stocks estimated as worth $1,000,000 have been transferred in Hoboken and a change brought about in the management of two well-known financial concerns, the First National Bank and the Hudson Trust and Savings Institution. This has been accomplished by S. Bayard Dod, Myles Tierney, ex-president of the North Hudson County Railway Company, and George W. Butts. Mr. Dod has long been president of both institutions, and as a result their interests have always been more or less mutual. Mr. Tierney was vice-president and Mr. Butts a director in the First National Bank dent and Mr. Butts a director in the First National Bank.

Mr. Butts first suggested a plan to separate the two concerns. After many conferences and much deliberation Mr. Dod agreed to dispose of his stock in the savings institution to Messrs. Butts and Tlerney. As a result of this plan Mr. Dod now has a controlling interest in the First National Bank and has severed his connection with the savings institution. Messrs. Butts and Tlerney no longer are connected with the management of the First National Bank, and together, it is said, hold a controlling interest in the Hudson Trust.

None of the men would discuss the deal yesterday. A rumor was in circulation that Mr. Dod had been forced out of the trust company, but Mr. Tlerney and Mr. Butts both said that this was untrue. They declared that the agreement had been amicably reached.

The stock of the First National Bank is quoted at nearly $500 a share, and the stock of the Hudson Trust and Savings institution at $500.
